CityLAB IX

Cities and states: exploring a complicated relationship

In this CityLAB, a range of scholars from a variety of disciplines will introduce you to their research on cities and states in the North as well as the South, now and in the past. You will also hear from urban professionals and high profile politicians about how they see cities in relation to national states. You will be able to discuss your research with other participants and senior scholars. This summer school is for you if you are interested in how cities and states differ (or have differed) in the way they govern societies and how their impact varies on social inequality, power relations, ecological conditions and living in diversity.
